"ANDY IN HOLLYWOOD"

A Two Reel Sam Van Ronkel Production

(No.12 of "The Gumps")

Andy wanders through a movie studio and bopps a holdup man on the bean. The director goes wild because his scene is interrupted, and quits, taking the leading lady with him.

Andy is given the job. Little Chester and Min also crash and Andy settles back to be the big director around the place, having been duly passed because his face is acknowledged to be the funniest around town.

When the picture, titled "The Passion's Pal" is completed, Andy takes his family with him to see the opening showing. Andy plays the GREAT LOVER. He possesses gusto and bragadoccio, and does a fandango with the fairest lady in the Red Dog Saloon that makes the hard boiled eggs of that tough border community sit up and shout "whopee".

A villain of many evil deeds pulls a knife. Andy disarms him. Another and still another is pulled until the floor is covered with glittering blades. Finally, the villain makes a gettaway, taking the heroine with him. Andy pursues.

A bitter battle results and Andy throws out forty-four rogues and saves the queen of his heart for himself. ...But to his dismay, he looks about after the picture is over and sees the audience asleep.
